Regional Indian New Year Celebrations are held in communities around the world to celebrate the new year and are known as ganesha puja or ganesha chaturthi. The word ganapathi is said to be derived from ganas or the gods, while gana or ganae is the plural of gana. Ganesha, and especially the elephant headed deity, is the favourite animal worshiped and depicted in many Indian religious sculptures. The east Indian festival of lights, the birthday of the Hindu god, Ganesha, also known as Ganesha Chaturthi or Ganesha Jayanti is celebrated in India on the fourth day of the Hindu month of Bhadrapada as a religious festival, an occasion for joy, and a harvest festival. The story of ganesha puja begins in India many hundreds of years ago. The god Ganesha was conceived as a solution to an old question. One day Shiva and Vishnu were playing a game of dice and each became impatient with the other winning too often. The idol of Ganesha was carved on the stone mountain Panchavati by Brahma. Each day Ganesha would either appear as a baby or an elephant. Because of the great popularity of the Ganesha idol, the people of India began asking Brahma why the Ganesha idol would appear as a baby when he had been born as an elephant. A giant statue of Ganesha has been erected at the southernmost tip of India as a monument of the Indian independence movement. The temple of Ganesha, 82157476af
